1. Unity and Self-Reliance

The first step towards an African global order is the achievement of unity and self-reliance among African nations. This requires the rejection of colonial borders and the promotion of Pan-African cooperation and solidarity. African nations must also strive for economic independence by developing their own resources and industries, and by reducing their reliance on external aid and investment.

2. Collective Responsibility

The second step is the recognition of collective responsibility for the well-being of all Africans. This means that African nations must work together to address the challenges facing the continent, such as poverty, disease, and conflict. It also means that Africans in the diaspora must contribute to the development of their homeland, through financial support, investment, and the sharing of skills and knowledge.

3. Reparations and Compensation

The third step is the demand for reparations and compensation for the centuries of slavery, colonialism, and neo-colonialism inflicted upon Africa and its people. This includes the repatriation of stolen artifacts and resources, the cancellation of unjust debts, and the provision of financial assistance to African nations for development and reconstruction.

4. Cultural and Spiritual Revival

The fourth step is the revival of African culture and spirituality. This involves the promotion of traditional languages, music, art, and customs, as well as the recognition of the importance of spirituality in African life. It also means the rejection of Eurocentric values and ideologies that have been imposed upon Africa.

5. Education and Empowerment

The fifth step is the provision of quality education and empowerment for all Africans. This includes the expansion of access to primary, secondary, and higher education, as well as the development of vocational and technical training programs. It also means the promotion of critical thinking skills, self-confidence, and leadership qualities among African youth.

6. Sustainable Development and Environmental Protection

The sixth step is the adoption of sustainable development and environmental protection policies. This includes the development of renewable energy sources, the promotion of organic farming, and the conservation of natural resources. It also means the recognition of the importance of the environment to African culture and spirituality.

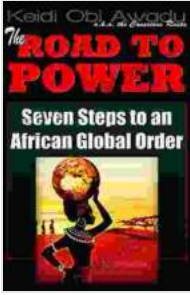

7. Global Solidarity and Cooperation

The seventh and final step is the building of global solidarity and cooperation with other oppressed peoples and nations. This includes the support for anti-colonial and anti-imperialist movements around the world, as well as the promotion of fair trade, cultural exchange, and peace-building initiatives.

The establishment of an African global order is a complex and challenging task, but it is an essential goal for the liberation of the African people and the advancement of humanity as a whole. The seven steps outlined in Conscious Rasta Report 18 provide a roadmap for the realization of this goal. By working together in unity and solidarity, Africans can overcome the challenges they face and create a just and equitable world order for themselves and for future generations.
